PROSPERITY OF PERMANENT KIND

The faith of Arizona people in Arizona mining is shown by the intense excitement in stock quotation reports in almost every mining city in the state. The first thing the miners and smelter men do when they get off shift is to hurry to learn the latest fluctuations in the stock market, for they have their money invested there.

Fortunate is the office clerk who can steal away for a few minutes now and then to obtain the latest quotation and compute his earnings.

Since the magical boom that sent the price of copper skyward, there has been an intense rush in the development of properties and the miners of Arizona have been putting their savings into Arizona stocks. Nothing signals better for the permanent prosperity of the state than the absolute faith of Arizona miners in Arizona mining.

Here a little salesman at The Republican office. "A want ad will see more customers than you can."

PROFESSOR MORSE STARTS CORN CONTEST FOR ARIZONA FARMERS

Believing that the Contest Will Encourage the Growing of This Important Crop All Farmers Urged to Participate

Prof. Stanley F. Morse, superintendent of the University of Arizona Extension Service, has announced that he is going to start a corn contest throughout the state of Arizona.

The following circular sent out by Prof. Morse, explains the contest in full giving the rules, etc.

Object

The object of this contest is to arouse the interest of the farmers of Arizona in the production of standard farm crops and to demonstrate that with proper methods, high yields and good profits may be secured. It is believed that a contest of this sort will not only instruct the farmers better how to improve their crops by seed selection, how to keep farm accounts and to realize the importance of attention to the details of farming but also that it will stimulate a desirable spirit of competition among the farmers which will result in a general improvement of farming methods. Corn is chosen for this contest for several reasons: (1) It is universally grown in Arizona; (2) It is susceptible of quick improvement so that results may be quickly and easily secured; (3) While many of the varieties of corn in the state are not equal to the grain sorghum in drought-resisting qualities, it has been demonstrated that under irrigation conditions, and in many cases under dry-farming conditions, corn is equal or superior to the grain sorghum (providing adapted varieties are grown) because of the fact that none of the objectionable effects on the soil occur with corn that there do with the grain sorghum. Many farmers believe that corn cannot be profitably grown in Arizona, but there is sufficient evidence that corn will be a success in most situations wherever proper varieties are grown. In many cases, however, it will be necessary to increase the adaptability of these various varieties by systematic selection and by standardization of varieties for the various climatic districts of the state.

Why May Compete

Any farmer in the state of Arizona of any age who will observe the rules and regulations of the contest may enter. Entries will close on June 15. Expert Assistance to Corn Growers. Every farmer who enters this contest is permitted to secure all the expert information and assistance that he can. For this purpose the county agricultural advisers and other specialists of the Agricultural Extension Service and the Experiment Station are at the service of the farmers without charge. It is suggested that in each case farmers who intend to enter the contest secure reliable information as to the variety of corn which is best adapted to their local conditions. A special circular covering the growing of corn will be printed and distributed, and every possible assistance will be given to contestants to help them make record yields and profits. This work of the contestants in the Arizona Boys and Girls' clubs has already proved that corn may be successfully grown under both dry-farming and irrigation conditions. In some parts of Arizona yields of 125 bushels per acre are reported, and it is believed that farmers taking part in this contest should be able to beat the 100-bushel mark. The farmer who makes this substantial yield at a profit on a field of five acres or more will certainly be in the championship class, and will be entitled to membership in the Top Notch Farmers' club of America. It should be understood that any contestant may raise more than five acres of corn, but that the five acres which are finally submitted for competition may not be in an irregular patch in the center of the larger field, but must be a special rectangular plot.

Prizes

This contest is being conducted according to an agreement with the Arizona Bankers' Association, and it is hoped that the banks in each locality will offer substantial prizes to the winners in the local contests. It is suggested to local bankers that a local contest consist of not less than five farmers. Prizes should take the form of something useful, such as farming machinery, purebred livestock, or most preferable of all, all expenses of a trip to the Farmers' Short Course next January at the University of Arizona. State prizes will consist of gold, silver, and bronze medals for the first three places. The farmer who wins this contest will be designated the State Champion Corn Grower of Arizona. It is suggested that special attention be paid to the selection and preparation of corn for the State fair. It will be noted that the rules specify that ten points shall be given for the exhibit of the best ten ears of corn at the state fair.

Rules

1. Each contestant shall grow not less than five acres of corn.
2. Each contestant shall keep a complete record of all operations in connection with his crop on blanks that will be furnished, and shall render a full report at the conclusion of the contest.
3. All records of costs, yields, measurements of fields, etc., shall be witnessed by at least two disinterested persons, or attested to before a notary public.
4. The following values or numerical grades shall govern in awarding prizes and in determining the champion corn grower of the state:
a. Yield per acre on 5 acre plots 10 points.
b. Cost per bushel for production 10 points.
c. Exhibit of best 10 ears of corn at state fair 10 points.
d. Character of report and records 10 points.
e. Quality and uniformity of crop 15 points. Total 100 points.
5. In case of a tie, the marketing ability of the contestants shall be the deciding factor.
6. The University of Arizona Agricultural Extension Service shall give wide publicity to the results of the contest, which will enable contestants to dispose of their surplus seed and attract attention to the farmers who are attempting to improve the corn of the state.
7. No entries shall be accepted after June 15, 1916.

United States in 1915 was over 500,000 short tons, compared with 407,000 tons in 1914, and 418,000 tons in 1913. With a continuance of high prices of spelter during 1916, the output will be greatly augmented, for the very high prices did not begin until April and May, and it was naturally some time before additional zinc mining could get under way.

The mining of zinc has become of premier importance in the state of Arizona. With zinc blende running 60 per cent bringing as high as $119.50 per ton, and with the average selling price of all grades of zinc ore running $107.52 per ton, zinc of real importance. Many of the ores of zinc are easily identified, and smithsonite, for instance, is often raised by, although pure mineral contains 52 per cent zinc. Arizona has had, and will have considerable importance as a producer of zinc, and is entitled to still more importance.

Information relative to zinc in Arizona may be had by obtaining Bulletin No. 29 of the State Bureau of Mines, by P. E. Joseph, which may be had by writing Charles F. Willis, Director, Arizona State Bureau of Mines, Tucson, Arizona.
